Brand New Book. Excerpt from Prophylaxis: An Anniversary Oration Delivered Before the New York Academy of Medicine, Wednesday, Dec. 19th, 1866 In an age like our own, fraught with the grandest results Of human progress, and in this day Of meridi onal civilization, the part played by science in the various fields Of discovery has become one of the chief Of national glories. All true progress begins and centres in her bosom; all enduring results, as potential for good in the future as in the present, start from her lap. Commerce in all its forms - edu cation - the control of the physical forces - the con quest Of matter, and the accumulation Of wealth, are each in turn fed from this parent reservoir. Science is, in her benefactions to society, what the sun is in his genial warmth to the earth. Blot the one from the skies, and living nature perishes; paralyze the energies Of the other, and man becomes as immovable as a vegetable. It is to science,...
