Excerpt: .agriculture, mining, transportation, and the like. The importance of this phase of the investigation will appear when it is remembered that scientific education has proved the most potent influence for overcoming superstition, and that only through science can production be so increased as to furnish the means for the support of the educational system which China undoubtedly needs. Mr. Burton and Mr. Chamberlin will meet in Peking in February and will then, though probably taking different routes through China, carry on their work in co-operation. High officials of the United States government have already expressed their interest in this undertaking on the part of the University, and the co-operation of both educators and officials in China is already practically assured. What results may follow this investigation is, of course, wholly uncertain. The University has studiously avoided committing itself to anything except a thorough study of the situation, but it can hardly be doubted that the information which will be gained through such study will enable American educators to apprehend more clearly what the educational needs and possibilities of China are and whether there is any way in which they can extend the field of their usefulness, not only beyond the limits of their own walls, but even beyond the bounds of America into oriental lands. EXERCISES CONNECTED WITH THE SIXTYSEVENTH CONVOCATION George Herbert Palmer, A.M., LL.D., Litt.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in Harvard University, was the Convocation orator on June 9, 1908, his address...
