Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Think of this small book as a collection of action snapshots of a region on the move. Sometimes the focus is on the land itself, such as brownfield sites in western Pennsylvania or small farms in southern New York. Often it s on infrastructure, like a replacement for an aging bridge in Tennessee or links between roads, rail, and a waterway in northeastern Mississippi. Frequently the camera zooms in on sophisticated technology, such as laptops used by schoolchildren in Georgia or satellite-assisted surveys in western Maryland. Always, always, we see people in action-working together to build something. What they re building may be a structure, like a water line along a rocky ridge in western Virginia; or a strategy, like a Kentucky program designed to produce homegrown doctors for rural Appalachia. Sometimes they re investing in projects whose payoffs may not materialize for a generation, as with a West Virginia youth leadership camp or an Alabama county s efforts to encourage its talented high school graduates to stay in the area. One way or another, all these stories are about capacity building-acts of faith in the future of Appalachia. They re also about collaboration within communities, across the Appalachian Region, and with partners in the larger world outside Appalachia. In that respect, they re evidence of how Appalachia has changed during the 37 years since the President s Appalachian Regional Commission called Appalachia a region apart from the rest of America. But they re also examples of a continuing commitment to the vision that made change possible. In 1965, economically speaking, Appalachia s eggs were in a very few baskets, each vulnerable to market shocks. The Region depended heavily on the extraction of...
