Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.1in.Excerpt from CopyrightedIn the following pages the author has discussed some of the important relations of the engineer and architect in practical life, with which it seems essential that the technical man should become familiar before entering professional practice. In the teaching or study of the preparation of specifications. little advance can be made by an attempt to prepare an elaborate specification for a complicated engineering structure of which the student knows nothing. In such a case, all that can be expected is the copying, with perhaps some small changes of some similar specification prepared for some proposed or completed work, and such practice will be of little value. The principles and elements of specification writing should be taught by the preparation of...
