Germany and Japan sign a treaty with two oil companies: The two countries divide among each other the oil exploitation in Siberia. In exchange, they renounce all interests in oil in most other parts of the world in favor of these companies. The diplomatic courier carrying the German version of the treaty from Tokyo to Berlin disappears traveling on the Trans-Siberian Railroad while crossing the Soviet Union. 2002. Nearly seventy years later. Jack Boulder, a Canadian living in the Swiss city of Basel, is asked to trace the original copy of the treaty by the German Foreign Office. What is so important about an agreement that is outdated Why is somebody interested in the original Why does a German government office offer so much money for this task if they know exactly whom to ask for its whereabouts Soon Boulder realizes that certain parts of the puzzle are not foreign to him. Driven by curiosity he follows the trails of the Unnamed Forces through Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, the United States and Russia - and the forces follow him. The circle closes in Siberia. Who gets the Russian oil Who finances the pipelines Who receives the money A novel with a gripping story against both a colorful historical and current contemporary political background. The plot is full of period detail, rapid, humorous, and full of suspense. At the same time it traces the attempts of the central character to come to terms with the entanglement of politics, bureaucracy, and business. The book introduces protagonist Jack Boulder and presents his friends Laszlo Nagy, a former art forger, and Annabel Conti, who is working for a Swiss bank. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from...
