Green Oracle Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 326 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.8in. The only thing Norah Pasquale wants is the kind of love she sees in her favorite Bollywood films: All-consuming, passionate devotion. Her dating reality, however, seems to only include cheaters and losers. How much time she could save if she knew of her dates shortcomings beforehand! Norah holds an impressive position as personal assistant to Baz Vancouver the sexually ambiguous star of the late night cop show, Handsome Blue. For the most part, Norah is able to stay distracted from her lack of a love life; she has her hands full with Baz. As needy (and naughty) as Baz is, he and Norah seem to have a telekinetic bond that keeps them together. When Baz gets thrown out of his hotel there's only one place that will take Baz: The Hotel Ursula, an establishment run by the famous Santos family of hotel magnates. Norah has trouble with the front desk clerk and treats her to one of her famous professional tirades. The clerk makes a phone call and from nowhere appears the most beautiful man Norah has ever seen. It's the hotel owner and eldest brother of the Santos clan, Nikos Santos. And Norah's first impression has been less than stellar. As though she needs more frustration, Norah's new man, a stand-up comedian, turns out to be a joke in bed. Literally. When he interrupts their very first lovemaking session to write down a one-liner for his act, then later that week gets caught backstage with a techie, it's more than Norah can bear. In order to cheer Norah up, her best friend and next-door-neighbor Helen lets her in on the best-kept secret in New York: The Exchange, a highly exclusive underground database of single men in New...
